There is no denying that maintaining a clean and comfortable living environment is a responsibility that every single member in the family shares. I am opposed to the idea that most of the household chores should fall on the parents in order that the children can have more time studying. Unfortunately, the situation mentioned above is a commonplace in our society. At first glance, parents are saving time for their children, but actually they are depriving their children of the opportunity to learn to be a considerate person. In other words, they are sending the message that everyone should only care about his own business even if that means you have to be irresponsible and ignore what you are supposed to do. Instead, parents have worked hard to support the family, and, therefore, I tend to support the opinion that the parents should have the privilege to rest at home and be free from all the housework. That is, the housework is something the children should take care of.

Take my family for example, I have two siblings, and we make sure that we cooperate well each other to make our home a pleasant place to live in. At the beginning of every month, we would discuss how to split up the housework fairly and see to it that we are satisfied with our own task assignment(s). Only in this way can we do household chores well. In general, I am in charge of vacuuming the living room on a daily basis. My two sisters do the dishes and the laundry. However, when we are done with our own task, we would lend a helping hand to one another. We always bear in mind that we are a family and we make a point of family harmony. In conclusion, I am convinced that it is the children instead of the parents that should take care of all the household chores and make sure the environment is cozy and pleasant.

In my opinion, every member of a family should contribute to housework and chores. These contributions to the family build respect for one another and for the space in which one lives. Sharing of housework should be varied and constantly changing so that each member of a family gains experience in each particular chore. A chart showing individual jobs can be posted somewhere at home where it is easily accessible to the whole family. Weekly, on Sundays, both parents will assign chores to themselves and the children in their family. Each chore should be completed within the allotted timeframe. If a child does not complete the tasks by the end of the day specified, they shall lose their privileges such as TV time or play time. If a parent is unable to complete a given task, that task shall be assigned to the child with the lightest workload for the week. With structure and organization, household chores can be completed with minimal stress or friction within the family.

As a child, I was given several household chores within a week. I sometimes complained and sometimes was willing to do everything with a smile. I found quickly that complaining led to more difficulty and more stress in my family relationships. Therefore, if I hurried and got my work done as soon as possible, I would have all the freedom I wanted to pursue my own activities without the stress of being worried about my parents being upset that I hadn't taken care of my responsibilities. I am glad that my experience leads me to a greater understanding of responsibility.
